Local Environment Benefits

Answering the question of why someone would go green or should go green can be difficult when the benefits reach into the local environment. For some people, the benefits to the local area and its citizens can mean more than any sort of personal lifestyle benefits they may receive. An example of local environmental benefits can be the reduction of chemicals and pollutants in the air. This is noticeable in larger cities, but may be difficult to implement throughout the city as a whole. The reduction of chemicals and pollutants in the air can be seen, more effectively, in smaller rural and suburban communities. This reason to go green offers a cleaner breathing environment, safe foods and safe water systems.
